Question 4

Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow:

Isaac Newton's name may still be seen today carved out into the wood of a window sill at King's School, Grantham, where he studied Grammar and Latin. At first, Isaac Newton seemed to be rather a dull boy, and not very good at his lessons. But he used to use his hands to make little machines such as windmills.

One day at school, Newton was kicked by a bigger boy who was higher up in the class. The kicking made Newton very angry and he turned on the bigger boy and gave him a good beating. He also decided to beat him at lessons, and this made him start to work harder. After that, he improved at his studies, and so perhaps the big boy who kicked Newton did a service to the world.

Newton went to Cambridge University where he studied Mathematics and Science. He started to make discoveries in Mathematics while still at college. However, Newton did not confine his studies to Mathematics. He became very interested in the behaviour of light, and he showed that sunlight, which appears to us as white light, can be split up into the colours of the rainbow. One day at school, Newton watched an apple as it fell from a tree to the ground. He began to wonder why it moved towards the Earth, and not upwards towards the sky. After a great deal of thought on this subject, he produced his theory of gravitation and published it in his great book 'Principia Mathematica'. He showed that everybody attracts every other body. The sun and the Earth attract each other, and so we do not fly away from the sun into the darkness and coldness of outer space; the moon and the Earth also attract each other, which is why the moon stays near us and does not rush away, leaving us in darkness every night. Newton's head was usually so full of ideas and problems that he was often quite lost in thought. Many stories are told of his absent-mindedness.

Once, when he was entertaining some guests at dinner, he went out of the room to fetch some more wine. For a long time, his friends awaited his return but neither the host nor wine appeared. At last, they went to look for him and found him hard at work in his study. The wine, the dinner and his guests were all forgotten. On another occasion, he invited one of his friends to dinner but when the man arrived, the great philosopher was not there. The guest sat down to wait and repeatedly looked hungrily at the dinner table not far away. Two plates were laid and everything seemed ready for an excellent meal. After having waited a long time, the guest could wait no longer. He sat down at the table and enjoyed a splendid dinner alone after which he returned to his other chair and sat down once more to wait for his missing host.
