Question 4

Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow:

Mrs. Smith, an old lady, was delighted to be back at the block of flats where she lived. She was exhausted after her shopping and her basket had grown heavier with every step on the way home. In the elevator, her thoughts were on lunch and a good rest. When she got out on her own floor, both were forgotten in her sudden discovery that her front door was open. She was thinking that she must reprimand her maid the next morning, for such a monstrous piece of negligence, when she suddenly remembered that she had gone shopping after her maid had left and she had turned both the keys in their locks. She walked slowly into the hall and at once noticed that the doors of the rooms were open, whereas, following her regular practice, she had shut them before going out. Looking into the drawing room, she saw a scene of utter confusion by her writing desk, with the things strewn all over the place.

It was as clear as daylight then, that the burglars had forced an entry in her absence. Her first impulse was to go around all the rooms looking for the thieves, but then she decided that at her age it might be prudent to have someone with her. So, she went to fetch the porter from the basement. By this time, she was shivering and her legs began to tremble. Then, she sat down and prepared a cup of strong tea while she telephoned the police. Soon, she regained her composure and was ready to set off with the porter's assistance to search for any intruder, who might be still lurking in her flat.

They were through the rooms, being careful not to touch anything, as they did not want to hinder the police in their search for fingerprints. The chaos was inconceivable. She had lived in the flat for thirty years and was a veritable magpie at hoarding and it seemed as though everything she possessed had been tossed out and turned over and over. Nevertheless, sorting out the things she should have discarded years ago, had now become easier for her. After some time, a police inspector arrived along with a constable and verified that the front door locks had not been forced, thereby proving that the burglars had either used skeleton keys or entered through the balcony.

There was no trace of any fingerprints, but the inspector found a dirty red bundle that contained jewellery which the old lady claimed did not belong to her. Therefore, the entry of the burglars to this flat was apparently not their first crime that day and they must have been disturbed in their mission. The inspector then asked the lady to try to check what was missing by the next day and advised her not to stay alone in the flat for a few nights. The old lady thought that he was a fussy creature, but since the porter agreed with the inspector's suggestion, she rang up her daughter Margaret and asked her for her assistance after relating the entire episode.
